2020 marks the third year since most Rohingya women, men and children currently living in Bangladesh were forced to flee Myanmar. The Rohingya people have faced statelessness, systematic discrimination and targeted violence in Myanmar’s Rakhine State for decades, which has repeatedly driven them across the border into Bangladesh. Significant influxes have occurred in 1978, 1992, 2012, and 2016. The largest and fastest influx began in August 2017. Some 855,000 Rohingya refugees currently reside in 34 formally established camps in extremely congested conditions.

The Rohingya have been consistent and clear in their message: they would like to go home – but only when it is safe, and they can be sure of access to basic rights and services, and a pathway to citizenship in Myanmar. While we work toward solutions, humanitarian partners will continue to meet the needs of Rohingya refugees in Bangladesh, and their host communities, under the leadership of the Government of Bangladesh. The 2020 Joint Response Plan builds upon the significant achievements of the response to date, made possible through the efforts of both refugees and their Bangladeshi hosts, the generosity and engagement of donors, and the work of the Government and humanitarian partners.
